Section C: Objectives and Activities

Summary of the objects of the charity set out in its governing document.

The objects of the CIO shall be the furtherance and enjoyment of the study of natural history and to expand members' knowledge of natural history and identification skills through a mixture of lectures, competitions, tuition and other activities within a social environment.

Summary of the main activities undertaken for the benefit in relation to these objects.

The Wakefield Peregrine project has delivered the main part of the society's objective by engaging with members of the public and existing members of the society through the society's website, with live images from the peregrine nest being streamed to the internet, with Twitter updates, a Facebook group and YouTube coverage. In addition, nest-watch days were carried out through the 'nesting' period with optical equipment and volunteers being on hand to inform members of the public about the Peregrines and allow them to take a look at the nest and the birds which resulted in some great feedback and engagement with both young and old alike. Two of the peregrine-watch sessions were used to collect donations from the public.

The society continues to support groups carrying out scientific studies by supplying information relating to peregrines and other natural history topics on request. As in the previous year, the peregrine chicks were ringed by the Sorby Breck Ringing Group and it is hoped that future observations of the birds will add to scientific knowledge.

To further the society's objectives, members of the society have delivered lectures, talks and slide shows to local community groups explaining, in particular, about the history of the peregrines, their life cycle and behaviour which has both generated a lot of interest and donations for the project.

In addition to the Peregrine Project the society has hosted a number of indoor talks through the year and has organised walks on local nature reserves.

The trustees have had regard to the guidance issued by the Charity Commission on public benefit.
